Problems with Digital Imaging There are two ways to make perfect photos: light and dark. Unfortunately, the world doesn't work that way. Whether a photograph or a scene, you'll find that something in the photograph is an object of more or less significance to the scene. In the case of a portrait, this is usually the subject, but a landscape, scene, or object can have a similar effect. Whatever it is, it will command the viewer's attention and respect. People will be interested in the photo of the object and turn their attention to it. They'll be less interested in the rest of the image. Still, the eye naturally gravitates toward more important or dramatic elements of a photo—and the rest fades in importance. It's what makes most of us want to buy more than one camera. If you would like a new computer, you need to consider buying a laptop computer that meets the following criteria. - Can you use the keyboard regularly and easily? - Is it powerful enough to do the photoshop editing and other image editing software you need? - Can it do both? - How much can you spend? - Can you work efficiently? - Can you easily open and close the laptop and carry it around? Also, a mouse works well for simple image editing software. The professional versions of photoshop and other graphics software require a "cursor" and a mouse to work perfectly. You can use a mouse with most laptops, and many people prefer them to a touch screen. But you must decide if a touch screen is a good idea for you. Most of the laptops on Amazon.com's computers section are great choices. Most have powerful processors, and most of them are powerful enough for photoshop. If you want a cheap budget laptop, look at Dell, HP, Sony or Lenovo, or a Korean computer store for a thin and light Asus Zenbook, HP or Asus ultrabook or a Chinese computer store for an Apple MacBook. You should buy from a store you know and trust, as you would with electronics, food and anything else you purchase. When you purchase online, you'll need to read Amazon reviews of the items you are considering. If the product is a popular one or is one that is heavily discounted, there may be a lot of dissatisfied buyers or those who report inaccurate information or other problems that make the item potentially dangerous or unusable. Consider buying from a store where you can return items if they are defective or unsatisfactory, including the manufacturer's warranty. Check the information you have and make sure you are not making a mistake. For example, a "deluxe" model of a laptop has more memory and processors than a "basic" model. Good quality videos come on hard discs; bad ones come on DVDs or cheap hard discs. S-Video is only used with select older video adapters and VGA is only used with very old video adapters. This guide provides information that you need to consider as you are looking at the laptops available for purchase and what they can do. Budget Laptops "Deluxe" model - Core i3, i5, i7 - 6 to 8GB of memory - nVidia GeForce 9 series graphics and before the court, the conviction in the California court is not an adjudication of fraud under federal law; it is a conviction for a substantive offense. -7- J-S62024-16 In Appellant's third issue, Appellant claims that the $5,000.00 fine that was imposed in the case at No. 1390 EDA 2014 is illegal because the statute for the offense is 801(3)(12), and the statute for the charge for which he was convicted is 601(1)(2), both of which carry a maximum fine of $10,000.0 Although both offenses are in Title 61 of the Pa. Code,⁸ the provisions relating to fraud are in Chapter 5, and the provisions relating to the uttering or possession of a forged instrument are in Chapter 6.9 The Act provides otherwise, stating that: [I]n every case tried under [Act 109], the provisions of [Section] 601 of the Crimes Code shall govern except as modified by section 1710 of the Crimes Code. 61 Pa.C.S. § 1711(a). In this case, Appellant was charged with uttering a forged instrument in violation of 61 Pa.C.S. § 601(1)(2), and convicted of that offense under Section 612.1(a)(2) of Act 109. Appellant's brief at 9. This is because 61 Pa.C.S. § 1710, titled "Definitions," states that "[w]hoever utters or possesses a forged instrument of any character with the intent to defraud another is guilty of a misdemeanor of the third degree." 61 Pa.C
